

- The reaction order for a chemical reaction is given by the sum of the powers in the rate law. Why is the reaction order usually given by a small positive integer, i.e. 2 or less?

Are zero order reactions possible? Explain your answer using examples if possible.