

- In an electron microscope, to what minimum velocity must the electrons in the beam be accelerated in order to achieve a better spatial resolution (i.e., have a shorter wavelength) than a visible light microscope? Assume an average wavelength of visible light of 500 nm.

Marks
2

Answer: