

- In a linear molecule consisting of a carbon chain with alternating double and single bonds, the HOMO and LUMO are often extended over the whole length of the molecule. What will happen to the size of the HOMO-LUMO gap as the length of such a molecule is increased?

2

Assuming that the molecule absorbs in the visible range, how will its colour change as the molecule length increases? Give a reason for your answer.